Would you like to develop new teaching skills and improve your students' results but need a flexible course that fits around your teaching and personal commitments? If so, then Being an Effective Teacher, ABRSM's online distance-learning course, may be just what you're looking for.

If you're new to teaching, this course offers a good grounding in effective teaching practice. For experienced teachers, the course provides an opportunity to refresh your thinking, gain new skills and consider current trends in music education.

Being an Effective Teacher

Who is the course for?

This is a short online course for teachers of all levels. You do not need any specific qualifications to enrol; we simply ask that you are aged 16 years or older, already an instrumental or vocal teacher, and are teaching at least one student regularly.

What does the course involve?

The course runs over 15 weeks from your chosen start date, during which time you will be asked to submit four assignments. An experienced ABRSM mentor will guide you through the course, providing personal feedback and advice at every stage. You will participate in a series of group discussions via online forums, enabling you to interact with other teachers. You will also be given access to a number of specially designed resources, including film clips, tutorials, and links to additional teaching resources.

The online format of this course allows you to be flexible about where and when you study so that you can fit it around your other commitments. The course is available worldwide; however all assignments and correspondence must be completed in English.

During the course you will explore the latest theories and initiatives in music education. Your mentor will help you to understand how these affect your work and how to apply them to your teaching. You'll also be encouraged to exchange and discuss teaching ideas with your mentor and course colleagues and try out new approaches in your own teaching. As you discover more about your own teaching style you will gain the confidence to try out new ideas with your students, and assess their effectiveness.
